Eurozone's Annual Inflation Above Market Expectations in October

According to the European Statistics Office (Eurostat), annual inflation in the Eurozone is estimated at 4.1% in October 2021, up from 3.4% in September and above market expectations of 3.7%. Inflation rose for the 10th consecutive month in October, owing primarily to a 23.5% increase in energy prices. Services, non -energy industrial goods, food, alcohol and tobacco all increased by 2.1%, 2.0% and 2.0%, respectively. Core inflation, which excludes more volatile factors such as energy costs, food, alcohol and tobacco, is estimated at 2.1% in October, up from 1.7% in September. Although annual inflation is estimated to be higher than the European Central Bank (ECB) target rate of 2% in October, underlying inflation is only marginally above.

Over the short term, inflation is likely to remain elevated due to ongoing supply constraints and shortages. However, this remains clouded by the uncertainty of the path of COVID-19. The ECB's monetary policy committee recently indicated that inflation was higher due to increases in oil, gas and electricity prices, as well as demand rising faster than supply for other goods and services. Given that the increase in October was heavily driven by the volatile energy prices, the spike seen in October turn out to be temporary. Notwithstanding, the central bank anticipates that inflation will remain high in the short term, but eventually fall in 2022 as the issues fade away. If inflation turns out to be transitory it is likely that interest rates could remain low over the period and is a plus for consumer and business activities within the Eurozone area.
